TEXT 1: IBERIAN LYNX COMES TO TOWN

- 1 The Iberian Lynx remains an endangered species, rarely seen by the general public and remaining only in a very few areas of the 2 Spanish countryside, as efforts continue to protect it and increase the number of breeding pairs in the wild. The lynx generally hides
3 away from humans and with very good reason, since eradication of its habitat, farming, roads and hunters are the main causes why
4 this magnificent animal is endangered in the first place.
5 So, residents of Rociana del Condado in Huelva (near Doñana Park) were both surprised and excited when a young adult male was 6 spotted running through the streets of the town on a Friday morning. News of its sighting spread rapidly and villagers gathered to try
7 and capture a photograph of the lynx once it settled down by the church at the centre of the town.
8 Local police called technicians from El Acebuche Breeding Centre and agents from Seprona (Nature Protection Service), who managed
9 to capture the animal two hours after it was first sighted. The young male appeared to be one year old and was not microchipped, which 10 means that its birth had not been recorded as part of the programme to protect the species in the nearby Doñana Park.
11 After an initial check-up, the lynx was transferred to the Endangered Species Recovery Centre and will remain there until the final 12 results of the tests, after which it can be tagged and released into the wild.
13 The organisations involved in saving the feline from extinction say that numbers are still very low, their aspiration being to achieve a 14 move to the classification of "vulnerable" species rather than "endangered" within the next five years.

TEXT 2: LITERATURE TO THE PEOPLE

1 The public plazas in Grenoble, France, might appear to be a prototypical European panorama of outdoor cafes, people walking, and
2 picturesque historic architecture. But the city has recently installed a handful of vending machines that, rather than snacks, dispense
3 short stories in an effort to change the way people kill time. Instead of checking Twitter or playing videogames, the city's residents may 4 discover a new story from the publisher Short Édition.

5 The vending machines can be used for free and operate 24 hours a day. Simply decide how long of a story you'd like (one, three, or 6 five minutes), press the corresponding button, grab the printout and start reading. Currently, there are 600 short stories in the 7 dispensers, which represent the best written works on Short Édition according to its community of 141,000 subscribers and 1,100
8 authors.

9 Quentin Plepé, co-founder of Short Édition, and his team came up with the idea a couple of years ago as they were standing around
10 a snack machine in their office. What if the same concept could be applied to literature, they wondered. After two years of development, 11 they finally launched their design. "The city council got involved from the beginning. What they really liked was the fact that the 12 dispensers distribute culture through the city in an original way," Plepé says. "Stories are an important part of our life. More and more
13 people don't take the time anymore to sit and read a book. This is a way to have a little 'bite' of a story, just for a couple of minutes," 14 concludes Plepé.
